EU opportunities for Youth to gain work or other experience

For plenty of young people is harder and harder getting new experience every year. We are living in the age when employers require disproportional amount of experience every year. But where should young people gain them? The secret of success is knowing where to look. The European Union offers many educational possibilities for students and absolvents. There are projects like Erasmus which is basically studying abroad for one or two semesters.

For non-formal learning there is Erasmus +. When people there can express themselves and gain very useful information. European Youth Portal is a website where you can find projects, volunteering, learning, cultural events and much more. So if you have no idea where to look for or just need some inspiration this is the place where you should be looking. (europa.eu)

We asked few participants of Young Stars about their experience.

Do you think you have some extra experience beside education? Where did you learn about them?

- I have some experience but I gain them through internships abroad. I wanted to go abroad so I was looking for it by myself. The University didn't help me at all. (Daniela, 26, Czechia)
- I have enough experience for my job. Travelling, working and learning by myself. (Antreas, 29, Cyprus)

- I'd had few student's jobs not relative to my study field (hotel, shop, researches). Volunteering during summer in Spain and Africa. I learnt about those opportunities in our student organization at the University. (Eleanora, 24, Croatia)
- For sure. I do extra courses, seminars and classes. I was asking people for advices and looking for it online. (Panayia, 22, Cyprus)
- I don't have. I've just participated four times in Youth exchange. I've heard about it from my friend in college. (Tihan, 20, Croatia)

Building a dream

So, I was asked to share with you my experience about my journey to that point of being able to say I have a successful business story. I was thinking about a daily routine I believed I would have as an interpreneur after my project was ready or even before. This routine started with early wake full of energy, morning exercise, shower, breakfast and coffee in my cozy house as I dress up and read the news or checking my incomes raise. And of course after work a simple night life with my friends or boyfriend.

However, my life before and after the project it's almost the same. I work more than 8 hours a day because it's not just that I have to be productive but also I have to study a lot and always learn more and more about new companies - potential enemies - $new technologies and be aware of the market demand.

Being an interpreneur in the beginning seemed cool but now it feels lonely, I worry, I'm sad, distressed about money on daily basis and this was not meant to be the plan. And I strongly believe that people who are not in their private life authentic and transparent just can't sell anything and knowing how to sell your product it's just the way to the top. My life might be stressful but I focus on positivity. I always search for the efforts that are producing the biggest results and that's where most interpreneurs fail because they think that the secret to success is just working yourself to the bone. Funny thing is that I quit my job and went for business instead but in the beginning I had nothing to invest on my idea. So as a web developer and a programmer I made a plan and tried to use whatever I had for the start to make my business accessible to others. My plan was a circle of needs and demands that communicate always between them. My first point was "what are the main things that are important to reach the target audience" then "how to distribute data efficiently to get instant results" and finally "how to maximize the duration value of the content across various channels". From my previous job I learnt how important marketing is - digital marketing - even more than hard work or the invested money. Its all about good advertisement and aiming to the users needs. According to that my priority was mobile SEO because users nowadays prefer to have everything inside their phones.

Concluding, running a business it's not having a big fancy office and ties or heels. Its actually sportswear for most of the time, a cup of coffee and hours of studying, searching and talking to the phone. To those with innovative ideas dont be afraid to explore your limits. It might be exhausting but the mental satisfaction of doing something on your own, of failing but standing again to your feet it's one of the best feelings I've ever experienced.
